

The Decennial Publications, Vol. 7: On the Text of Chaucers Parlement of Foules (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The Decennial Publications, Vol. 7: On the Text of Chaucers Parlement of Foules

In the Globe edition of Chaucers works, published by The Macmillan Company in 1898, and edited by A. W. Pollard, M. H. Liddell, and others, the Parlement of Foules is, with the other minor poems, supervised by Mr. H. F. Heath. In his brief introduction to the poem Mr. Heath prints the genealogical tree of most of the manuscripts as it was indicated by Koch in Anglia, IV, Anz., p. 97, remarking that he agrees with Koch in its construction. The diagram is as follows: But a minute collation of the entire text of the Parlement of Foules will, it seems to me, lead a student to several conclusions: (1) that the above genealogy must be modified in detail; (2) that, even were it accepted, some of the readings elected by Mr. Heath are unjustified; (3) that, if the results here arrived at be correct, the discussion of Chaucerian metre must be reopened. These conclusions I shall examine in full below. Examples of the second point may be given at once: e.g., in line 65, of the two main (and four secondary) groups as drawn out by Mr. Heath, one main and an opposed secondary group read or indicate And was sumdel ful of harde grace, the other sub-group having, plainly by alteration in its own immediate source, the reading And ful of turment and of harde grace. This latter, adopted by Mr. Heath into a nominally critical text, cannot be supported on the manuscript evidence. Other examples of modification necessary to a critical text are much less radical; indeed, an interesting feature of this examination has been the general correspondence of the resultant text, so far as verbal similarity goes, with those printed by Professor Skeat (Students Chaucer) and Mr. Heath. A still more interesting feature has been the frequency with which Professor Skeat, following what I may term the method of genial intuitivity, has arrived at readings in harmony with critical deduction, while Mr. Heath, working with a genealogy of the manuscripts before his eyes, has deviated.
