Not illustrated. 1919 Excerpt: ...Sky very dull. No luminous haze or clouds. 15h 33,: No luminous haze. Sky thickish; specially thick over Jupiter and the Pleiades. Some misty haze--not luminous. Some zodiacal light at 15U 421. Some feeble luminous haze above Jupiter and the Pleiades. A great deal of dark haze: a long mass of it was probably feebly luminous in Cassiopeia and evidences of it at a number of other places. 15h 50m: There were streaks and masses of haze feebly luminous near the Pleiades; some strong strips and great sheets of it all over the south. These were not self-luminous, but were all brought into view, evidently, by reflecting the first feeble dawn. They were, however, beyond question the same stuff that had recently appeared luminous at night. Aug. 24, 12h 50TM. No aurora. There were horizontal strips of luminous haze through the upper part of the Great Dipper with a clear space below them, with more luminous haze lower down. Great long masses through Hercules with clear space below; then more of it to the northwest horizon. 14h 30TM: A rather strong strip of luminous haze just above the handle of the Great Dipper in the north. There was also a horizontal strip across Vega with a clear space below it. No aurora. The sky where there was no luminous haze was very clear. 15 50: No aurora. Dec. 21, 14h iom. No aurora. 14h 44TM: No aurora. I noticed a little later what appeared to be a strong zodiacal light passing through Spica in the southeast at 14h 57m; this proved to be an extended luminous haze. At 15, 30m the upper part of it passed through Alpha and Kpsilon and Beta Crateris and Gamma Hydrae. The upper edge was rather definite. The whole mass extended from the east horizon to beyond Crater. The motion of all this was to the southeast. The sky ...
